We have all been traumatized and our hearts broken by the recent events involving the killing of George Floyd. We at the Latino Corporate Directors Association (LCDA), believe that our nation faces a moral imperative to address the long-standing racism and injustice that resulted not only in Mr. Floyd's death, but in countless other unjustifiable deaths of African Americans over the years. We stand with George Floyd's family and the entire African American community in the search for justice and equity. LCDA will be an ally in seeking solutions.

Diversity and inclusion are at the core of who we are at the LCDA. Our members serve as corporate directors and hereby commit to do their part in the boardroom and beyond to help formulate business solutions to these issues. At the LCDA, we believe that to solve difficult problems, we must be equipped with facts and differing perspectives. Accordingly, as a first step in delivering on our commitment, I have asked our CEO, Esther Aguilera, and the LCDA staff to plan a series of virtual conferences, in the near future, with business leaders and experts to address how directors and executives can best help in contributing positively to these complex topics.

I am confident that with the support and dedication of our LCDA members, we will be staunch allies in finding impactful ways to contribute to the work of building a more just and equitable society.

Sincerely,
